I have been engaged in the built environment for more than a decade as an architect, urban designer, and environmental steward. My professional experience in the US includes working at large architectural firms on a variety of architecture and planning projects. I also helped establish DIG, a design visualization studio which my husband and I run out of our home in Mt Washington. I have always aspired to improve the quality of life through sustainable built environments and am interested in the impact of architecture and design on health and well-being. So, I have served as a volunteer member at American Institute of Architects Sustainability and Well-being Committees for years and organized, led and attended many educational programs and events on this subject. I would like to join our Neighborhood Council to promote design strategies and decisions that are environmentally friendly and improve occupants' health and well-being for the residents of my beloved neighborhood.
